

Defending against Online Manipulation

2 min

With the continued ability of AI to generate mass amounts of content, some malicious actors have begun to use artificial intelligence to create and spread misinformation. Defenses against this type of content are tough, however.

While generated misinformation may initially be created and spread by bots and other non-legitimate sources, it is effortless for this information to be seen and spread by actual users. Once information is spread this way, it quickly becomes a game of telephone, spreading false, misleading, and, at times, dangerous content across multiple platforms for countless people to see and believe.

When we look at defensive measures designed to stem this risk, there is little we can do in many situations. While staying informed, fact-checking, and independently researching suspicious claims can help individuals avoid fake content, be it AI or human-generated, the issue related to the spread of this content relies heavily on group willingness to partake in these types of tasks. Unfortunately, it is easy for a group to fall prey to fake content.

While ethics committees and oversight boards can help ensure AI is developed in such a way as to limit this damage, these committees are only sometimes listened to, or in some cases, they have been disbanded entirely.

Additionally, when we discuss the spread of misinformation, many argue it is the responsibility, at least in part, of individual platforms to ensure false information is not spread and abused. Unfortunately, the groups and teams responsible for this are rarely provided the necessary resources they require and, in some cases, are entirely removed for cost-saving purposes.

The lack of support and resources for this cause makes it a real threat to our modern era.

Task: Try to identify the real article snippet

Identify the real article snippet.

Select the article written by an actual Journalist.

Unveiling the Royal Coronation Stamp Collection, a commemoration of King Charles's historic crowning. This exclusive series encapsulates the regal essence of the coronation ceremony, showcasing intricate designs that mirror the grandeur of this significant event. Explore the cultural significance of these stamps, symbolizing the magnificence of King Charles's reign.	In honor of King Charles's 75th birthday, the Royal Coronation Stamp Collection emerges as a testament to the regality of the coronation ceremony. This limited edition series features exquisite designs that elegantly commemorate this historic milestone. Delve into the artistry and cultural significance of these stamps, securing a piece of royal history in celebration of King Charles's momentous occasion.	A new set of Manx stamps celebrating King's coronation would allow people to "relive the magic and splendour" of the occasion, the post office has said. The seven-stamp set features photographs of the King and Queen during key moments from the ceremony on 6 May. The release coincides with King Charles III's 75th birthday. Isle of Man Post Office's Maxine Cannon said the collection was a "timeless reminder of the momentous occasion".
--	---	--